Over a decade of high performance computing in South Africa

This month's talk will discuss the temporal evolution of the Centre for High Performance Computing since it was established to date, with particular emphasis on human capacity development in high performance computing and big data science.

By Dr Daniel Moeketsi, Centre for High Performance Computing, CSIR, South Africa
The Centre for High Performance Computing (CHPC) is part of the National Integrated Cyber Infrastructure System of the government of South Africa. It was established in 2007 by Department of Science and Technology and is managed by the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research (CSIR)
