In June of 2020, the Aerotropolis Institute Africa (AIA) of the University Of KwaZulu-Natal (UKZN) in partnership with the KwaZulu-Natal Department of Economic Development, Tourism and Environmental Affairs (EDTEA) started an on-going dialogue and discussion on the impact and aftermath of COVID-19 on Aerotropolis developments through a coordinated series of webinars. Whilst the international airports have begun to normalize their international and domestic operations and developmental plans; the same cannot be said for the province's secondary, regional airports; which has coincidentally impacted the recovery efforts of regional tourism. In part three of the series, we seek to not only highlight the challenges that are faced by regional airports in terms of route development, but to review the investor and tourism interests of regional airports in the province of KwaZulu-Natal as well as discuss the potential of the integration of secondary airports into the greater South African Aviation Sector.
