Leveraging ICT for Africa-Centred Teaching and Learning Collaborations:

Date: Monday, 29 July 2024 | Time: 14h00 - 16h00

In today's world, characterised by rapid globalisation and digital advancement, the integration of ICT into teaching and learning practices opens new avenues for intra-African collaboration in higher education. It is important for academics, researchers, and practitioners alike to discover how leveraging ICT can facilitate seamless knowledge exchange, foster impactful research partnerships, and enhance collaborative learning experiences across universities in Africa. Therefore, as the higher education community, let us explore how online platforms are transforming academic collaboration, driving innovation, and advancing educational excellence continent-wide.

Join us as Prof. Jude T. Lubega shares his insights and engages in meaningful discussions on advancing Africa-centred teaching and learning collaborations.

Prof. Jude T. Lubega

Profile

Prof. Jude T. Lubega is a distinguished academic and professional in the field of Information Technology. He is currently the Vice Chancellor of Nkumba University. With a wealth of experience in ICT for Development (ICT4D), over the years, Prof. Lubega has held numerous significant roles. These include being a Deputy Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at Uganda Technology and Management University (UTAMU) and Head of the Information Technology Department at Makerere University. He has been an Independent Evaluation Committee Member for both the African Host Universities for the RSIF and the RUFORUM Young Innovators Awards. He also chaired the Task Force for the establishment of the Institute of IT Professionals in Uganda and served as a Director at UTAMU.

Jude has been a key figure in the ICT sector as the Chief Executive Officer of 8Tech Consults Limited since 2009 and as a member of the ICT Committee of the Inter-University Council for East Africa. His contributions have been recognised globally, including being listed among the 100 Movers and Shakers in Corporate Online Learning in Africa for 2018. Within these many years of practice, Prof. Lubega's extensive research and consultancy work span e-learning, data science, mobile computing, and ICT strategic planning, contributing significantly to the development of information systems and ICT innovations in education, governance, and health sectors.

With such a wealth of knowledge, Prof. Lubega has published widely in journals, books, and conference proceedings and has been involved in numerous national and international ICT projects. He has also served as an external examiner for various universities and contributed to curriculum development and training programs across Africa.
